MIGRANT CRISIS: SORT IT OUT NOW

New Home Secretary urged to get a grip on Britain's borders

By Macer Hall Political Editor

NEW Home Secretary Amber Rudd was warned last night that she must stick to a key Tory election pledge and slash migrant numbers.

Ms Rudd – appointed by Theresa May last week – sparked anger when she declined to commit herself to reducing Britain's net migration figure to below 100,000 a year.

David Cameron's Government had vowed to ensure annual net migration returns to the "tens of thousands".

Achieving that would require a big cut from the official figure of 330,000 for last year.

But in her first comment on immigration since taking over at the Home Office, Ms Rudd refused to be drawn on a number, declaring: "What the Prime Minister has said is that we must bring migration down to sustainable
